

Akin to Joss Whedon teasing Marvel's The Avengers untitled sequel while promoting the original box office behemoth in Japan, a few weeks ago, Marvel Studios' president of production made an effort to tease the 2014 movie coming before The Avengers reassemble; Guardians of the Galaxy. In yet another rough translation, via Japanese movie blog Nifty, Kevin Feige seemingly explains why the Guardians were greenlit, among things. During the Q&A session published only three days ago, Kevin Feige revealed the reason he and the studio are moving forward with Guardians of the Galaxy is because he "wanted to do something with it space." He continues, "I've got a story I wanted to tell the world [that is] not directly related with the characters of "The Avengers," [until?] a little later." While the Guardians & The Avengers aren't exactly "related," it's strongly believed the former movie will lead directly into the latter's

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=66328>