

During this past weekend's New York Comic-Con, Underworld: Blood Wars star Kate Beckinsale said that plans for a crossover between that franchise and Blade were quickly dropped after Marvel Studios made it clear that they're "doing something" with the vampire hunter. He was last seen on the big screen in Blade: Trinity, and while there have been rumours about what's next for him since then - mostly from Wesley Snipes - nothing solid has been revealed since Marvel regained the rights in 2012. Talking to reporters following a sneak peek of Doctor Strange, Kevin Feige offered an update on where things currently stand with Blade, and it definitely doesn't sound like they have anything concrete in place. In fact, he doesn't even appear to be sure about whether he'll end up in a movie or on TV! "They did ask a long time ago and I think our answer was, 'No, we'll do something with 'Blade' at some point.' That's still the answer.

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/blade/kevin-feige-says-nothing-imminent-is-happening-with-blade-confirms-a145897>