

The folks over at the Box Office Magazine recently chatted with the driven force behind Marvel Studios, President of production Kevin Feige. Essentially speaking in-depth on maintaining standalone stories for upcoming films, Feige also darts on Iron Man 3, as well a tentative Doctor Strange flick. How much do you think of each new Marvel movie in the context of the larger cinematic universe, as opposed to being a self-contained story? They're all developed separately—they're all developed on their own with the sole intent of making the best movie possible for this character. We do have timelines and various markers that we like to keep track of across the movies, and head into future movies potentially. But that's always sort of the seasoning as opposed to the actual ingredients of the movie. We're in very early stages of talking about the story for Iron Man 3 with our writer-directors on that,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=37086&t=Kevin_Feige_Speaks_On_Future_Films_Maintaining_Standalone_Stories_And_More