

Speaking to The Playlist, Marvel Studios' president of production Kevin Feige talked about what will happen after their big screen adaptation of The Avengers, which is set to hit theatres in 2012. He was asked about the 2013 and 2014 slate and when will we get new announcements, but he was very brief about that: "Later, towards the end of the summer we'll announce what it is." On Black Widow and Hawkeye movies: "There's no definitive plans, but we have started talking and talking with Scarlett about what a Widow movie could be. Internally we've also started thinking what a 'Hawkeye' movie could be, how we could continue to explore the organization [which Samuel Jackson's Nick Fury leads] S.H.I.E.L.D, which has a pretty big part in 'Thor,' smaller parts in the two 'Iron Man' films and has a giant part in 'The Avengers.' [So it's like], what would a stand-alone "S.H.I.E.L.D." be like? It
