

According to Bleeding Cool, UK film website Blogomatic3000 caught with Marvel Studios president Kevin Feige during tonight's European premiere in London. And among things discussed, Feige vaguely opened up on the rumor, sparked via Robert Downey Jr., that minor filming resumed following a recent press conference in Los Angeles. Not only confirming it, the producer reveals it isn't as big as many fanboys hoped and believed. "I will tell you this: It was not a scene. It was not a scene. There's little things. It's been blown out of proportion. Which is fun, I like that things are blown out of proportion. Sometimes they're true sometimes they're not." When asked if the edit will be changed, Feige says, "There is the potential that there will be one little change. People might not even notice it. It's not a big thing" Marvel Studios presents in association with Paramount Pictures

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=58257>