

Kevin Smith has had a few chances to play in the world of superheroes, from writing comic books to directing television shows based on them. However, the writer and director maintains that he is a fan first and foremost, something that was on full display during his New York Comic Con panel yesterday when he raved about Marvel's Luke Cage. "It was f*cking good," Smith said (via ComicBook.com). "I had no expectations of that and they told a much better story than I thought they would. I mean we live in a world were they are making a f*cking Ant-Man sequel. We didn't have this sh*t when I was growing up." Smith went on to tell the audience that fans of comic book films should be appreciative of all of them, bad or good, given that he, as a fan, is now able to see his own childhood dreams come to life. "Creation path is wide open, man. We should appreciate it. It is

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/batman_vs_superman/kevin-smith-believes-fans-should-appreciate-all-comic-book-a145780