

Those of us who are products of the 1980's will remember a gem of a film called Killer Klowns from Outer Space, which featured a troop of large, misshapen, creepy clowns who came from outer space to use humans as a food source. Taking cues from early B-Movies, the camp is quite prevalent and the circus theme is carried all throughout the film, from the popcorn bombs and silly string guns, to the cotton candy cocoons they store their human feasts in. Needless to say, Killer Klowns is cheesy horror at its best. Here's the good news, it seems that a "requel" is headed to theaters sometime in 2012. Firstshowing, via Facebook, has learned that the Chiodo Brothers, who wrote, directed and did the puppeteer work for the original 1988 film have been working on a new film for the series and the production is well under way. The film, likely to be

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=51904&t=iKiller_Klowns_From_Outer_Spacei_to_get_a_Requel_in_2012