

A group known as Monarch Sciences will play a key role in Kong: Skull Island, and they're the ones responsible for sending a number of teams to the monster's home in order to learn about the island and the creatures that inhabit it. A viral campaign for the movie has kicked off via @MonarchSciences, and some new footage from it has now been discovered on discoverskullisland.com (see below). #kongskullisland pic.twitter.com/XmcUjxvTnY — Big Blue (@cineloon) November 12, 2016 ComicBook.com has more details about how you can access these folders of recon footage for yourself, but Kong: Skull Island's official Twitter account has announced today that a brand new trailer for the movie will be released online this Wednesday. This actually makes perfect sense as it will likely be attached to Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them in theaters from Thursday evening onwards. The calm before the storm. #kongskullisland pic.twitter.com/f4KCjpAzmo — Kong: Skull Island (@kongskullisland) November 12, 2016 The impressive cast of Kong: Skull Island includes Tom Hiddleston, Samuel L. Jackson,

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/sci-fi/king-kong-swats-helicopters-in-new-footage-from-kong-skull-island-ahead-of-a146737>