

Legendary Entertainment has been churning out some really great posters for their upcoming release Kong: Skull Island, with their recent Japanese one-sheet being one of the more noteworthy. The film is now exactly one month out from release, meaning we should start to see a lot more footage of the various other kinds of monsters found on Skull Island. The latest pair of TV spots tease a few of the nasty creatures that'll be featured, with the Skullcrawlers getting a lot of attention as we'll undoubtedly see Kong face-off with the creepy crawlers at one point or another throughout the course of the film. Jordan Vogt-Roberts (The Kings of Summer) helmed the monster movie, which serves as the second installment in Legendary's MonsterVerse after 2014's Godzilla, with a script from Dan Gilroy (Nightcrawler) & Max Borenstein (Godzilla). Tom Hiddleston (Thor: Ragnarok), Samuel L. Jackson (Avengers: Infinity War), John Goodman (Transformers: The Last Knight), & Brie Larson (Captain Marvel) headline an impressive ensemble that also features Jing Tian (The Great
