

Today's Logan image from the WponX Instagram account may not seem all that interesting, but on closer inspection there may be a couple of things we can glean from it. The pic shows what appears to be the ruins of an old structure which the caption reveals to be a smelting plant, and if you look closely, you'll spot a limousine parked nearby. Wolverine (Hugh Jackman) is rumored to be working as a chauffeur in the film (this would seem to be confirmed by some recent set snaps), so it's a safe bet he's in the vicinity. Why would Logan be lurking around a smelting plant? Well, he does happen to have a metal skeleton, so it could well have something to do with that, and - providing the script has taken some influence from the Death of Wolverine comic arc - might possibly factor into the last act. How, exactly? Just take a look at the header image above. This is all

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/x-men/the_wolverine/latest-official-logan-image-teases-a-key-location-from-the-a145905