Reports Deadline.com, "Legendary Television is in negotiations with Warner Bros. Television for a deal whose terms are still being worked out. It would be an extension to Legendary's 7-year co-financing pact with Warner Bros. on the feature side. Legendary's approach to TV is expected to mirror their film strategy of developing broad projects with a focus on the fanboy/male demographic. Just like Warner Bros. Pictures has been mining DC Comics properties for film, several of them with Legendary (Superman Returns, Batman Begins, The Dark Knight, Jonah Hex) WBTV has been doing so for TV. "...In addition to TV, Legendary, which was launched in 2004, is also currently expanding into gaming and digital media. Additionally, the company is launching Legendary Comics, a graphic novel imprint. Legendary, which released 4 movies in 2010, Clash of the Titans, Inception, The Town and Due Date, has 2 films coming up this year, Zack Snyder's Sucker Punch
