

Badass Digest talked to Feige at CinemaCon about something I've been thinking about for quite some time. Robert Downey Jr. (47) is not going to play Iron Man forever. The question is, how much longer? With the MCU set up for all intents and purposes as a cinematic comic book universe, the stories will just continue on unless there's a New 52 wholesale reboot. Unlike their comic book counterparts, the actors that suit up in superhero movies age [some very badly]. And while most of the Marvel heroes are young, RDJ is no spring chicken and will likely be the first actor [RDJ or Samuel L. Jackson] who will say goodbye to his franchise. Here's what Marvel Studios President Kevin Feige said when he was presented with this very scenario.

FEIGE: "I think Bond is a good example. Let's put

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=58710>