

Several actors who play roles within the Marvel Cinematic Universe have often joked about the team "snipers" the company employs to keep plot and character details quiet, though the company has a reputation for being highly efficient with this measure. Luke Cage star Mike Colter dropped by Conan O'Brien's show last night to discuss the Netflix series, and offered a glimpse of what it's like to be under the Marvel magnifying glass. "Yeah, I mean they had a few little incidents back in the past where actors would like have their script and they would leave it accidentally on like a bench or something at a park, and then someone would find it, and not someone, a marvel-like person would find it, because they follow us, you know that right? They follow us. I'm never alone, ya know, like even now someone in the audience works for Marvel," Colter joked. "So after awhile they got past that and they started putting them into
