

Thanks to Zack Snyder casting him as Superman in the currently-in-production Man of Steel, actor Henry Cavill has become something of a household name, which only helped to enhance his work as Theseus in Tarsem Singh's Immortals. It's a pretty heady time for Cavill, whose biggest claim to fame up to this point has been a co-starring role in Showtime's The Tudors as well as near misses on such iconic roles as James Bond, Batman and Superman (the McG, pre-Superman Returns version). His life is changing (likely forever) and his every move captured on the Internet by paparazzi and fans, yet as we discovered in this exclusive interview, the 29-year-old Brit seems to be handling it pretty much as one would hope from a guy solidifying his position as one of cinema's newest portrayer of larger-than-life heroes. MEDIA GEEK NETWORK: I remember when I was on the set of Immortals,
