

The CW's superhero shows have come a long way since Arrow debuted in 2011. Five years later, audiences will now have a crossover that features Green Arrow, The Flash, Supergirl, and many other heroes (and villains) from Legends of Tomorrow. With Supergirl's arrival on the network, it was believed that they would be crossing all four shows over, but Arrow executive producer Marc Guggenheim clarified with EW that it will only be three shows that are featured, with Cisco and Barry travelling to "Earth-CBS" to recruit Kara at the end of an episode of Supergirl. "Some people call it a four-way crossover because it involves four shows; my ulcer requires me to call it a three-part crossover," Guggenheim said. "The story that's being told has a beginning, middle, and end: a beginning in Flash, a middle in Arrow, and an end in Legends. But Supergirl is very much a part of the whole thing, so we are crossing over four shows — four shows

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/dc_tv/arrow/marc-guggenheim-teases-arrows-100th-episode-reveals-how-supergirl-a146129