

Whoever cut the trailers for Snow White and The Huntsman deserves a gold medal. The movie teased in the film's marketing barrage over the past two months is not the movie you're presented with in actual cinemas. Appearances would lead movie goers to believe that a clever re-imagining of the Snow White fairy-tale would be awaiting them in the theater but instead we're given 2 hr and 07 minutes of The Lord of the Rings minus Gandalf, Frodo and Aragaorn. Which is kind of ironic considering that Viggo Mortensen was at one time locked in for the role of The Huntsman, played by Chris Hemsworth. Of course taking inspiration from The Lord of the Rings is not a criticism, just an observation on the point that the movie was not marketed as such and some viewers may be surprised and perturbed by this fact. The acting trifecta of
