

If you haven't read Frank Miller's rant against the Occupy Wall Street protests you can do so HERE. It's admittedly pretty ridiculous. As far as I'm concerned he hamstringing any valid points he might wish to put across with what is verging on paranoid insanity. But that's just my opinion, obviously some agree with him, some don't. But in the "don't" camp there are those that have really hit back hard against Miller and even some who have called for boycotts of the writer's work etc. This doesn't sit to well with Mark Millar who posted the following to Millarworld.. It's strange to watch your favourite writer getting strips torn off him for a couple of days. Politically, I disagree with his analysis, but that's besides the point. I wasn't shocked by his comments because they're no different from a lot of commentators I've seen discussing the subject. What shocked me was the
