

Well, we've certainly seen a lot of opinions about 20th Century Fox essentially making Mark Millar, their 'Joss Whedon' (at least that's what speculation is saying his role is, it's still undefined at this point). That's not to say he'll be directing anything of course but he'll be the guy 'steering the ship' so to speak on their decisions of what and who to adapt for feature films. Below, Millar also thanks directors Matthew Vaughn and Joe Carnahan who were instrumental in Millar getting the gig. While we know what Vaughn and Millar can create (Kick-Ass), it will be interesting to see what can be produced from a potential Joe Carnahan collaboration. Carnahan of course was Fox's choice to do the impossible and direct a Daredevil film at the 11th hour. Millar could potentially repay Carnahan by pushing the studio to select him to direct one of

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=67948>