

A new article on Digital Spy says that comic writer and now creative consultant to Fox's Marvel films such as "Fantastic Four" and "X-Men", Mark Millar gave a recent interview to SFX about the upcoming X-Men film. This is what Millar had to say: ""You've got robots, you've got time travel, you've got superheroes - it's got everything in one film," he claimed. He also said that it is "no spoiler on [his] part" to say that the film goes into an apocalyptic future." There's no mention of what superheroes we'll see or which time periods that the time-travel aspect will focus on, so it's pretty much anyone's guess at this point if anyone like Patrick Stewart or Famke Janssen will show up from the original "X-Men" films for the new one, as previously reported. That said, I'm sure we'll see Wolverine involved at some point, since he's been in every X-Men

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/StuartGreen/news/?a=68898>