

Latino Review has just posted an article covering their on set visit to Green Lantern in New Orleans back in August. Included in this report is an in depth interview with actor Mark Strong who we are all aware portrays Sinestro in the upcoming film. While much of the interview is information that we have gathered in bits and pieces over that last 6 months, there are plenty of new tidbits to read about. Below are a few excerpts from the interview pertaining to Strong's ability to play so many different villains. He also discusses the difference between the character of Sinestro in Green Lantern and Matai Shang in the upcoming John Carter of Mars due out next year. Did you have any trepidation taking on another comic book villain? I definitely thought about it because how often can you play something that shares its DNA with other characters before it either becomes
