

It's a big year for comic book films. One of the big screen adaptations that is coming out this summer is Green Lantern, directed by Martin Campbell. There were already couple of trailers and TV spots, so we know what to expect from the film. Campbell is no stranger to smart and entertaining action films, since he made probably the best James Bond film to date, Casino Royale. He had quite a big task on his hands, to translate the whole Green Lantern universe to the big screen, especially since they've decided to go with CGI costumes. In a recent issue of SFX Magazine, subscribed by CBM's DCMarvelFreshman, director shared some info on the action scenes, his approach on big scale sequences, what he thinks is interesting about Hal Jordan and more. What can we expect from the action scenes: "I want the fights to knife fight in a phone booth - quick

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Wolvie09/news/?a=37762&t=Martin_Campbell_On_Green_Lantern_Action_Scenes_Psychology_Of_The_Character_More