

Last year Steve Weintraub got to visit the set of Green Lantern on the last day of principal photography. While there he got to speak with Campbell about the upcoming comicbookmovie. The interview asked about: "Why Campbell wanted to direct the film. If there was any talk about doing 3D before production started. How they're using a color palette for different parts of the movie. Directing the flying scenes and casting Ryan Reynolds and Peter Sarsgaard. And the challenges of being the director on a 103 day shoot, and so much more. If you wanna hear the interview, head to the link! What is it about the Green Lantern that made you sign on?: "First of all, I haven't been offered lots of these superhero movies. [laughs] I've done some "real" superhero movies, but not comic strip superhero movies. It was because I had never done one. Secondly, it was because Green

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Sector2814/news/?a=37455&t=Martin_Campbell_Talks_Green_Lantern_On_Set