

Talking to Crave Online, here is what the director has to say: On what is ideal for him to create and launch new things: Well, I'm cheap. No, the thing is I've never done a comic book movie before. Superheroes, I guess, yes. Bond, I guess is a form of superhero, and Zorro obviously is, but I've never done a superhero movie before, and I wasn't even versed in the comic when it came through the door. Once having read them and so forth, it fascinated me about the whole world of Green Lantern, going to another planet, going to the center of the universe. That's really why I did it. What it is about me, these things aren't about me, really. These things are a huge team effort by everybody. It's always handed across to the director. I'm the guy on the floor certainly, but Donald [De Line], my producer, a huge

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Jolt17/news/?a=39325&t=Martin_Campbell_Talks_More_About_iGreen_Lanterni_and_iJames_Bondi