

"In the normal run of things, there'd be quite a lot going on for me," Martin Freeman told Empire Magazine in a recent interview on the set of The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey. "I've got ears, the wig and the feet, which three more things than an actor normally has... But then I look over at the dwarves and see what they're lugging!" You see, while he may be finding those additional props a pain, his dwarven co-stars are carrying around nearly 80kg of accessories all while wearing fat suits and various prosthetics. "They're absolute troopers," he sympathises. As for how work on the movie is going, Freeman said that he's enjoying it despite admitting that he's far from an expert on the source material. "It wasn't in my orbit at all. I'm not sure it would have been very helpful if I'd always wanted to play Bilbo Baggins. I'd have come up

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=51857&t=Martin_Freeman_And_Andy_Serkis_Discuss_Filming_Gollums_Cave_Scene_In_THE_HOBBIT