

Speaking to CBR about the finale of Avengers: Ultron Revolution, Marvel VP of Animation Stephen Wacker disclosed that the upcoming new Spider-Man TV show will look to adapt 2011's Spider-Island crossover which saw normal residents of Manhattan gain Spider-Man's abilities but slowly begin to mutate into the Man-Spider version of the wall-crawler.

“Another story we have coming up on the Spidey side... we'll get to 'Spider Island' at some point. That was a big Spider-Man story in publishing.” Another modern Spider-Man story Wacker wants to tackle is 2013's The Superior Spider-Man which saw Doc Ock swap bodies with Peter Parker but in the process, become motivated by Peter's memories to become a better Spider-Man than Peter ever was. “The big one for me [personally] would be 'Superior Spider-Man'. That was the last big story I worked on in the comics side with Dan Slott. I'm not quite sure how we get there, but I'd love to see it.” Indeed it seems Wacker much

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/spider-man/marvel-animation-vp-says-new-series-will-tackle-spider-island-also-a148526>