

Marvel Comics Editor-in-Chief Axel Alonso stowed away on CBR TV's yacht at Comic-Con International in San Diego to discuss the publisher's current and upcoming projects, from the significance of the recent immigration of a number of Marvel's characters to the Los Angeles area and the challenge of accurately and logically depicting the City of Angels. Alonso also weighs in on DC Comics' September relaunch, questioning the rival publisher's plan to release 52 new titles in a single month and naming the one book he's most looking forward to from the New 52. Marvel's newly announced Defenders title, under the creative guidance of Matt Fraction and Terry Dodson, is also discussed, with Alonso explaining why it's a title he's been wanting to relaunch for years. And, of course, "Fear Itself" and "X-Men: Schism" are a topic of discussion, with the significance of both events ending at the same time being emphasized as both titles will
