

The original Jon Favreau-directed Iron Man movie notably set the grounds for Marvel's The Avengers flick as well as the shared cinematic universe, which is now the fourth highest-grossing franchise/film series of all-time. And the 2008 blockbuster has also been dubbed the studios' greatest outing behind Joss Whedon's superhero spectacle. While the 2010 sequel received mixed reviews, and production on Iron Man 3 is in full swing, Marvel Studios' longtime executive visual effects vice president, Victoria Alonso, is confident the Shane Black-directed installment will be the best of the franchise. "This is a franchise I love – it's my baby. It's going to be a better film than the others and I'm working every day to make sure I do right by the fans who are looking forward to seeing it in May 2013. To bring superheroes to life is a constant challenge, and one that I'm honored to have" "The best visual

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=67825>