

First announced with Joss Whedon officially signing to once again write and direct The Avengers anticipated sequel, details for Marvel's mystery television series with ABC has finally been revealed. The ever-reliable Deadline has learned not only what the show'll be about, but also Whedon's role in its development. The infamous site reveals that the live-action series has been greenlit, and we'll revolve around the fictional peacekeeping organization that's been well-established in the Marvel cinematic universe; the Strategic Homeland Intervention, Enforcement and Logistics Division, better known as S.H.I.E.L.D. In addition, the site adds that Joss Whedon will pen the pilot, along with his brother, Jed Whedon and Maurissa Tancharoen. And set to start immediately, Whedon may also direct the pilot if his schedule allows it. The aforementioned writing team will also executive produce the pilot with Jeffrey Bell and Marvel TV's Jeph Loeb. There's no word on whether the S.H.I.E.L.D. cast
