

For the next year or so, Atlanta is going to be filled to the brim with superheroes as Marvel gets to work on both Black Panther and Avengers: Infinity War (not to mention Ant-Man and the Wasp this summer). The former kicked off production early last week while the latter just started rolling cameras today. To commemorate the occasion, Marvel co-president Louis D'Esposito has shared a very cool behind-the-scenes image from set showcasing a look at the new-and-improved logo for the upcoming Ryan Coogler-directed film, which stars Chadwick Boseman in the lead role. The new logo, which is the second overall, falls in line with how Marvel Studios tends to operate as they did something similar last year with the Captain America: Civil War logo, which went through three iterations before the final one was revealed on the theatrical release posters. Check it out below: Mornings with #BlackPanther afternoons #AvengersInfinityWar pic.twitter.com/wvzs3pib3W — Louis D'Esposito (@louisde2) January 23, 2017 Plus, Michael B. Jordan recently shared a photo of

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/black_panther/marvels-black-panther-gets-a-sweet-new-logo-plus-michael-b-jordan-a148393