

Marvel dropped a major surprise earlier this month with the news that IMAX would be partnering with them to develop a television show for the very first time, and that the subject of that show would be none other than The Inhumans, more specifically the Royal Family. Though no showrunner, producers, or stars have been announced for the project, the 8-episode series promising 'cinema-quality visual effects' will air on September 26th, 2017, three weeks after the first two episodes are set to premiere on a surprisingly uncrowded Labor Day on September 4th, followed by a two week run in IMAX theaters, spanning 1000 theaters in 74 countries, including China, meaning the show will premiere in nearly every IMAX venue on the planet. On ABC, the episodes will air one at a time for eight straight weeks, without any hiatus or missed weeks. This may cause some note that September 26th is a Tuesday, the day currently held by Marvel's other ABC show, Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D. However,

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/inhumans/marvels-the-inhumans-set-to-premiere-on-abc-september-26th-news-coming-a147154>