

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BrentSprecher/news/?a=29296&t=Matthew_Vaughn_Updates_emX-Men_First_Classes

In a recent interview with Empire, director Matthew Vaughn (Kick-Ass) said that he is excited to be working on X-Men: First Class and that, despite the need for reshoots and the looming release date, everything is "working" out just fine. I've always wanted to do a movie set in the '60s. The difference is that now I have experience. On X3 [which he was at one point set to direct] it was cast and I just had to tell the story. Here we have to recast every role, recreate the '60s - which is not easy - and redesign everything. We've been playing catch-up, but it's working. Vaughn went on to say that, even though First Class is a prequel, he did not feel the need to have his actors attempt to play their roles the same way as the actors who played the roles in the original trilogy of X movies. I wasn't