

Talking with MeMovies, screenwriter Max Landis updates on the proposed sequel to Chronicle, a found footage/superhero film released this year to critical acclaim. Landis says that the footage we saw in the first film did get out to the public. "The movie you saw (Chronicle) in the sequel is a thing. That edited footage is a thing. So it's not like 'we found this footage after this kids died'. You can't deny cars being thrown in the air in Seattle. You saw all those helicopters. The world changed. That's the end of 'Chronicle'. And things are going to be different now. They can't possibly cover up what happened." For those who hoped that director Josh Trank will return for the sequel, Landis has some disappointing news. "Josh is all over the place with other projects. I'm also all over the place with other projects, but 'Chronicle' is really my baby. Josh will

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=58756>