

Source: NBC Popcorn Biz Speaking to Popcorn Biz, the accomplished screenwriter rehashed her plans for ABC's foray into Marvel properties and compared the show's subject matter to Captain America: The First Avenger. "Brian Michael Bendis is an extraordinary writer," says Rosenberg. "I love that series. I love that character. And we're just hoping ABC has room for it in their fall schedule. Because, you know, it's dark material. It's not 'Captain America.' I mean, it is some pretty gritty, adult-themed stuff. So we'll have to see how that fits [on network television]. She's a former superhero with post-traumatic stress disorder trying to make it as a detective in New York. But she keeps on getting pulled back in, because she has some minor superpowers. She's got like B-level superpowers – she's so awesome! But she keeps on getting pulled back in, so she's straddling the two worlds." "It's very difficult to reference one

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=50560&t=Melissa_Rosenberg_On_AKA_JESSICA_JONES_Its_Not_CAPTAIN_AMERICA