

As a part of Entertainment Weekly's first-look at Ridley Scott's Prometheus, they sat down with actors Michael Fassbender ('David') and Charlize Theron ('Meredith Vickers') to discuss the film's much-speculated connection(s) to Scott's Alien film series. Fassbender confirmed that 'recognizable creatures' will be present in the sci-fi film, and that there's 'definitely a link to Alien' (something that director Scott confirmed a couple weeks ago). Theron, on the other hand, says that people should 'let go' of the idea of Prometheus being an Alien film. The top-secret project, about a team of scientists whose spaceship (called Prometheus) gets marooned on a distant planet, has been teased as an Alien prequel, and although Scott and his cast won't confirm that for sure, they certainly aren't denying it. "There's definitely a link to Alien," claims Fassbender before adding, "There's creatures in it that you'll recognize." But other cast members, like Theron, are playing coy. Says

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=50216&t=Michael_Fassbender_Confirms_Presence_Of_Recognizable_Creatures_In_IPrometheusi