

Talking to MTV Splash Page, the actor has revealed that despite the ending of X-Men: First Class, he still doesn't view Magneto as a full on villain. "I don't think he's a bad guy. I think he's all right, isn't he? Human beings having been doing some bad shit to him." In fact, it sounds like he's more interested in exploring the origin story of Charles Xavier (played by James McAvoy) in the sequel after a movie where the spotlight remained almost entirely on him. "I'm very interested to see where we pick up with Charles Xavier, to be honest. In the film we just did, 'First Class,' we got to see how Magneto becomes Magneto, how he leaves Erik behind and takes on the persona of Magneto. We've yet to see how Charles develops into Professor X. I think that's going to be interesting to take a look at." "I bumped into
