

Michael Fassbender was arguably (though I'm not arguing) the best thing about X-Men: First Class. Not that the rest of the movie wasn't great too, but his younger, tougher take on the man who would be Magneto really stood out as the movie's best highlight. Although he had been on Hollywood's radar before, that role really seems to have made Fassbender one of the most in demand actors working today. He has two very different but equally great looking movies in the pipeline; Shame and Haywire. While speaking to Total Film about these Fassbender also mentioned that sequel we all hope he eventually makes.. "If they make enough money usually they make a sequel. They usually give you the first one and then two options. I've got some interesting ideas for Magneto, as does James [McAvoy] for Professor X. "I know we really enjoyed working with each other and it would be great

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=50271&t=Michael_Fassbender_Says_Hes_Giddy_At_The_Prospect_Of_An_X-Men_First_Class_Sequel