

Source: EW In a recent interview with EW Michael Shannon had the following to say in regards to his General Zod costumes: Was that fun to step out of Van Alden's {his Boardwalk Empire character} shoes and into General Zod's for an out-and-out villainous role? General Zod is, I think, a bit stronger than Van Alden. General Zod would not go to the speakeasy and have a shot. General Zod will stop at nothing to get the job done. General Zod doesn't have a supervisor. Were you a fan of the Superman comics, or Terence Stamp's Zod in Superman II? I don't read the comic book, although when I got the job, they sent me a giant DC Comics book that weighs about a ton. It's got the whole history of DC in it. It's fascinating, actually. I looked at it with my daughter. She's really fascinated by it. I remember Terence Stamp doing it. He was

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=49144&t=emMichael_Shannonem_On_His_Two_emGeneral_Zodem_Costumes_In_emMan_Of_Steel