

"Well that's kind of a mystery because there's a whole bunch of stuff all over the internet that I'm doing a sequel and I certainly didn't put that stuff on there, so I don't know who did," Michael Madsen - who played a detective in the 2005 film - told MTV News in a recent interview. "But, wherever that came from, whoever generated that information, must be thinking that I'm doing that — but I can't seem to get an answer out of anybody." He goes on to say that he's failed to get a straight answer from either director Robert Rodriguez or the producer of Sin City, Harvey Weinstein (who apparently will NOT produce A Dame To Kill For.) However, despite his confusion about whether or not he will be brought back in the long-talked about sequel, the actor who originally auditioned for the role of 'Marv' revealed that he's

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=65259>