

Delivering one of the best episodes of the series, the season premiere of the hit series continues right where season one left off. After the explosion of the CDC, Rick Grimes and his group of fellow survivors are making their way out of Atlanta only to hit a road block of about 200+ cars. When a herd of zombies end with little Sophia being separated from the group. Rick and the other spend the next day searching for her. The show's characters and their development, much like the comics, are what interest me in the series. The series' writers continue to deliver superb dialogue and storyline; the actors and their wonderful performances also really help drive the series forward. I will admit some of the pacing of the series did slow a bit after they fought off a trio of church going undead, but the episode did pull the rug out
