

Back in November, some intriguing social media activity led to speculation that John Cleese (Monty Python, A Fish called Wanda, the Harry Potter movies) had signed on for a role in one of Warner Bros.' upcoming DCEU films. Though this was fairly tenuous evidence, we might just have a bit more to go on now. Ahead of an on-stage Q&A, the actor/comedian Tweeted out the image below, and visible on the table beside him are: Batman: The Dark Knight Returns, Justice League: Origin and Batman Noir: The Black Mirror. Getting into character before tonight's Q&A in Worcester, MA pic.twitter.com/ajek3bpyQS — John Cleese (@JohnCleese) January 20, 2017 This still isn't anything like irrefutable proof of course (he could even be trolling fans after hearing about the rumors), but unless Cleese is an avid DC Comics reader in his spare time, it's definitely a pretty good sign that he's going to be involved in an upcoming DC Films Universe project in some capacity - and the fact

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/comics/dc_comics/monty-python-legend-john-cleese-may-have-confirmed-his-a148455