

Heels off the news of Marvel Studios pursuing Game Of Thrones director Brian Kirk to helm their THOR sequel, from Variety and Movie Web's report, what's offhandedly mentioned may hint at a majorly new direction from the Kenneth Branagh-directed film. The "Thor" sequel is expected to feature a large cast of Aasgardians and creatures in the Norse mythology-set world.

Thor 2 is expected to double its cast of larger than life Aasgardians and mythical Norse creatures, making it one of the largest scale Marvel adventures to date, second only to The Avengers. Though I could be looking too much into it, this may hint at the possibility of the Thor sequel being more, if not completely, grounded in the magical Norse realm of Asgard? Or not even just Asgard, but also the other six realms, of the nine from Norse cosmology, not explored in the original film; especially if there'll be more creatures. Of course,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=43687&t=More_Asgardians_To_Appear_In_iTHORi_Sequel_Will_It_Be_More_Asgard-Grounded