

Midway through his chat with Mr. Beaks from Ain't It Cool News, the star of this Friday's Captain America: The First Avenger film, Chris Evans, discussed the reprisal of the role in The Avengers and his character's dynamic with the great Tony Stark; Iron Man. Keeping it in the WWII era was such a great idea. "I hope if the movie does well, and if we do a sequel, I really hope they keep doing little flashbacks. I hope they do like a whole subplot. The WWII is just so cool. I love movies like that. I love period pieces. I love walking on set, and like the whole street, the cars, the signs, the wardrobe... I mean, man, that's great! It's so easy to play make believe when all of this shit is happening, and I think it meshes well with Steve's character. His persona is one that really is a fish

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=42139&t=More_From_Chris_Evans_On_iThe_Avengersi_Dynamic_With_Steve_Rogers_Tony_Stark