

Movie Web caught up with actor John Hawkes (The Perfect Storm), and they asked him about his decision to pass on playing the coveted role of The Governor in the popular television series, The Walking Dead. A role that was later filled by the very talented thespian, David Morrissey. "They offered me the role, and I just felt there would be someone else who could do it better. I was flattered, and I took a look at the series. It held interest for me, but I just didn't feel like I was the guy for it. I have to be careful of what TV shows I choose, particularly ones that have commercials in them, because it's going to be a different kind of television show. There are going to be sponsors. No matter how good the show is, if there are commercials, it's going to be a different show, to me.

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=58180>