

From the moment it was announced that Kenneth Branagh would not be at the helm for Marvels planned sequel to THOR, there has been no lack of speculation concerning the reason for his decision. Over a month ago our own WaylonJones reported Branagh saying the following to Moviefone. "It was simply timing. I loved doing the movie, I'd love to do another movie for Marvel, and it was just timing. The requirement for me was just to get back in the saddle so swiftly that it wasn't really feasible, but it was a decision [Marvel] understood." Still, there were some who doubted that this "timing issue" was actually the reason behind his absence from the project. Now, speaking with metro.us he elaborates a little more as to why the timing was wrong. Hopefully, the following can lay some of the speculation surrounding his decision to rest. Can you talk about your own decision not
