

Talking to Slash Film, director Matthew Vaughn shared more info on making the upcoming comic book film X-Men: First Class. He addressed rebooting the franchise, his take on the characters, story and more. He also talked about making a sequel to Kick-Ass. Check it out below. On making a standalone film: "My main goal was to make as good a film that could stand on its own two feet regardless of all the other films. However I thought anything that worked in all the other movies, and I could have some fun with nodding towards, I would. But my main rule was, 'You know what, we're trying to reboot and start a whole new X-Men franchise' and therefore, making a film work on its own two feet was far more important than trying to be referential to the prior movies." On the characters chosen for X-Men: First Class, he said: "That was already done

Read more: [http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Wolvie09/news/?a=38106&t=More
_From_Matthew_Vaughn_On_Making_iX-Men_First_Classi](http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Wolvie09/news/?a=38106&t=More_From_Matthew_Vaughn_On_Making_iX-Men_First_Classi)