

Though knee-deep into production now, it's known that in the early days of filming for Marvel and Joss Whedon's The Avengers, a copy of actor Samuel L. Jackson's script was stolen, and offered online for a fee. While the thief has been found and put away, the 'Nick Fury' actor recently talked with W.E.N.N revealing how the mishap occurred, and the studio's reaction. He says, "When they sent me the new version of the script, I was shooting a film in Toronto (Canada) and my assistant copied it from the email (and printed it) in the office somewhere. And by the time we got to Albuquerque someone had stolen the script out of the printer and put it online for sale. "I didn't know printers had memories. And apparently my assistant didn't either. Marvel/Disney kind of got really upset about it. It caused a minor storm of investigation. They sent a team of

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=39736&t=More From Samuel L Jackson On iThe Avengersi Script Theft Marvels Reactions