

Well, isn't this great to hear? As a fan, it really is. John Carter, directed by Andrew Stanton (Wall-E, Finding Nemo) opens next Friday in US, and with that the review embargo has been lifted a whole week before the release. And is that a good thing? It appears so. Below are reviews, and while some didn't love the film, they liked it a lot. The film is getting a lot of positive reactions, and hopefully that will help at the box office. Below are parts of each review, and for the whole thing just click on the name of the site that posted it.. "Under the watchful eye of Pixar's Andrew Stanton (Wall-E, Finding Nemo), John Carter is epic in scale, lavish in its detail, and surprisingly funny – Stanton displays a certain reverence to his source material, but remembers to have fun with it. There's an innocent charm to John

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Wolvie09/news/?a=55644>