After revealing some interesting details yesterday (which you can find in RorMachine's article by clicking HERE) about the production schedule for the upcoming reboot of the Superman franchise Collider have now updated their article with more information from the same source. This includes specifics about where they'll film the movie as well as some plot details which make those rumours about it being based on Mark Waid's "Birthright" all the more likely sounding. To follow up on the confusion surrounding my tip off about the Superman production timeline: The scenes in Smallville aren't the first thing in the movie but are going to be filmed first for convinience and won't be a major part of the story but a key part. I believe that the stand in for Metropolis will be Chicago and NOT Vancouver. This is one of the key reasons why The Dark Knight Rises has moved to Detroit because TDKR doesn't
