

Mark Millar and Nacho Vigalondo have been hard at work on getting a screenplay together for a big screen adaptation of Supercrooks (the first issue of the comic book series went on sale today) and the director has now spoken to Comic Book Resources about his plans for the film. "Heist films are one of my favorite genres because they are based equally in character chemistry and plot complexity," he said when asked what it is that most appeals to him about the series. "I love this challenging story where the heist is followed in almost real time, inside a contained space, but twists and surprises keep coming all the time." The comic book series is pencilled by Millar's collaborator on Superior, Lenil Yu. As for whether the artists vision matches up with his own, Vigalondo revealed that he's a big fan of the Filipino artist and that the look he has

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=56759>