

Natalie Portman is currently generating a lot of Oscar buzz for her head-turning performance as Jackie Kennedy in the appropriately titled Jackie but her recent turn to more drama-oriented cinema has not completely shut the door on a Marvel Studios return. This runs counter to her comments back in August and additional reporting which stated that Portman and Marvel had a falling out after the studio parted with Patty Jenkins on Thor: The Dark World. Well, according to Portman, she's now interested in figuring out the blockbuster/superhero tentpole genre, particularly because of her young son. "It is amazing to get to make movies that become part of so many people's imaginations because it really is so widespread and now having a little boy too, you really see how much this becomes part of play and imagination and your internal life as a kid. It is really an incredible thing to get to be part of. As an actor it is like a

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/thor/thor_ragnarok/natalie-portman-now-open-to-returning-to-marvel-and-the-thor-a147807